

FIGURE 5-1. Positrons travel a distance before annihilation in the absorber and the distance increases with positron energy. Since positrons with different energies travel in zigzag directions, the effective range is the shortest distance between the nucleus and the direction of 511 keV photons. This effective range degrades the spatial resolution of the PET scanner. (Reprinted with the permission of the Cleveland Clinical Foundation.)